About the artist

Héctor Romero (Málaga, 1973).

I moved with my family to Madrid in my childhood, where I currently live. With a restless and creative character, I have always been clear that my professional activity would have to be related to design, art and creativity.

I studied interior design and after working in some architectural and design companies and as a freelance, in 2004 I decided to create the VOLTEO studio, where I currently work.

I always liked painting, going through a wide variety of styles. Encouraged by some recognition and positive reviews, it is only in recent years that I decided to make my work visible and to begin exhibiting. As I am familiar with perspective, technical drawing and the creation of spaces, I focus on a pictorial style that is a mix of surrealism, architectural minimalism, expressionism, metaphysics... desolate landscapes where the common link is in the combination of large blocks or forceful volumes, creating disturbing spaces. Impossible perspectives, dreamlike atmospheres where small shadows wander, geometries that betray themselves.

I like to add something more to my works. A touch of mystery and optical illusion, by creating forced perspectives with characters in different planes to be able to see the scene from two different points of view. There are almost always two human figures to give proportion to the composition. Sometimes, it is the same person, represented at the same time in the same place, but from a different point of view. But beyond the intended game of illusionism that all art ultimately proposes, I propose a three-dimensional plastic reflection on perspective, light and color. An open window to the world of dreams.
